Syn. Wetter, Wetterak, Wettering. denotes the changing a number of which commonly change according to the difference of climates and seasons, the Wetter those which change under the same climate and during the same season of the year. Wettering signifies the weathering of a substance, or the long period of time, Wetter during a shorter. T's German says it is beautiful Wetter (weather), when the sun shines and it is not rainy or windy, on the other hand the Wettering (chance) of the weather is not so pleasant, and severe in a country, the further it lies to the north. They say moreover, to day is beautiful Wetter (weather), but this spring, this summer, this autumn we have beautiful Wettering. In English we say weather, weathering, and "climate" or "season" can seldom be substituted for it in translating Wettering.

Zyn. Zinsen, Zenten, Zintante. Zin- sen and Zenten consist only of that which is given or received for the use of a piece of ground or of capital. Zintante, on the other hand, comprehend all kinds of useful things, which come in, as it were, yearly to any one.
The merchant reckons up the profits of his trade, the artist the payments for the productions of his art, the person on pay outlays in his pay as part of his Zintante, as well as doing so with his Zenten and Zinsen. In general Zenten are opposed to the Zintante from a salary or from the profit of a trade, they also include the Zinsen of one's capital (compare Zint and Zintante). Zin and Zente are distinguished, however, thus, that Zin (interest) signifies that sum, which the giver is obliged to pay and which the capitalist or proprietor has the right of demanding, ent- Zente (rent), however, in as much as the proprietor or capitalist receives it and by that means increases his Zintante (income). Hence it will be seen that Zin and Zente, especially the former, do not exactly mean the same thing which "interest and rent" do in English.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

I. The first class changes the radical vowel e into a in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex. Geben, to give; imperf. gab; past part. gegeben. To this class must be added bitten, to entreat (beg), which changes the radical vowel i in the same manner, as: imperf. bat, past part. gebeten.

II. The second class changes the radical vowel e or i into a in the imperfect, and in the past participle into o. Ex. Nehmen, to take; imperf. nahm; past part. genommen; gewinnen, to win; imperf. gewann; past part. gewonnen. To these must be added, gebären, produce (to give birth to), which has ä instead of i in the root, as: imperf. gebär; past part. geboren.

III. The third class changes the radical vowel i into a in the imperfect, and in the past part into u. Ex. Schlingen, to sling; imperf. schlang; past part. geschlungen; except dengen, to hire, imperf. dung; past part. gebungen; schinden, to flay; imperf. schund; past part. geschunden; and thun, to do, imperf. that; past part. gethan.

IV. The fourth class changes the radical vowel a into ie in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex. Halten, to hold; imperf. hielt; past part. gehalten; except fangen, to catch; imperf. fing; past part. gefangen. The following conform to the principle of the rule, resuming in the past part. the radical vowel or diphthong of the present: laufen, to run; imperf. lief; past part. gelaufen; gehen, to go; imperf. ging; past part. gegangen; heißen, to order; imperf. hieß; past part. gegeben; rufen, to call; imperf. rief; past part. gerufen; stoßen, to push; imperf. stieß; past part. gestoßen.

V. The fifth class changes the radical vowel ei into ie in the imperf. and in the past part or before a double consonant into i. Ex. Bleiben, to remain; imperf. blieb; past part. geblieben; schneiden, to cut; imperf. schnitt; past part. geschnitten.

VI. The sixth class changes the radical vowels: ä, au, e, i, ie, ö, ü, into o in the imperf. and past participle. Ex. Schwören, to swear; imperf. schwor; past part. geschworen; saugen, to suck; imperf. sog; past part. gesogen; laufen, to drink to excess; imperf. soff; past part. gesoffen; heben, to lift; imperf. hob; past part. gehoben; verwirren, to embroil (to confuse); imperf. verwirr; past part. verwirrt; bieten, to offer; imperf. bot; past part. geboten; schwören, to swear; imperf. schwor (schwur); past part. geschworen; lügen, to lie, imperf. log; past part. gelogen.

VII. The seventh class changes the radical vowel a into u in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex. Wachsen, to grow; imperf. wuchs; past part. gewachsen; stehen, to stand, has stand in the imperfect (formerly, however, stund), and in the past part. gestanden.

* The 5th and 6th classes include the greater part of the irregular verbs.

LIST OF THE IRREGULAR VERBS BELONGING TO EACH OF THE ABOVE CLASSES SEVERALLY.

The Asterisk (*) marks the verbs which are also conjugated regularly, when they have an active or transitive sense. The persons and tenses not indicated here, are regular, or are formed from the persons and tenses given. Derivative and compound verbs are conjugated like their primitives.

Weg-en, to rock (the cradle), is an active and regular verb

* All the derivatives from Fahren are irregular, except Beifahren, to accompany, which is regular. Fahren in the signification of, to lead, transport, takes haben as its auxiliary, in the signification, to go in a carriage, it takes sein. Ex. Der Reiter ſaß mich gefahren, the coachman drove me, Wir ſind auf das Land gefahren, we went into the country in a carriage.

† Malen, to paint, without the h is regular.

* Schaffen, in the signification: to procure, to provide, is regular

* The verbs Rathſchlagen, Berathſchlagen, to consult, deliberate, are regular.

† Those which have in the past participle t, and in the imperfect of both modes te, like the regular verbs, but which change the radical s llable, except ſenden and ſollen, which are regular in the past participle and in the imperfect of both modes.

REMARK.—It must not be forgotten, that the derivative and compound verbs, of inseparable or separable particles, must be sought for under their primitives. Ex. Entwerfen, to project, and Verwerfen, to reproach, under Werfen, to throw; Inde gehen, to go out, under Gehen, to go; Vorschreiben, to prescribe, under Schreiben, to write, &c.
